As for the meaning of each character described in C Primer Plus, what you expected is an 'correct' answer. It should be true for some computer architectures and compilers, but unfortunately not yours. I wrote a simple c program to repeat your test, and got that 'correct' answer. I was using Mac OS and gcc.

"And then as groups of us moved around the world, the color of our skin had to change. And here's why. Our skin is where we make vitamin D. If you don't get enough ultraviolet, then you don't get enough vitamin D. But if you get too much ultraviolet, then you break down your folates. You have to have it in perfect balance.
